Down from the Mountaintop: Black Women's Novels in the Wake of the Civil Rights Movement, 1966-1989

Melissa Walker

The civil rights movement is remembered by many as a series of supreme moments followed by chastening downfalls. The mountaintop experiences of Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka and the American Civil War, for example, are a common theme in the works of Française and James Baldwin. Yet this movement is also remembered by many as a period of heated debate about the values of the nation, as well as the national interest of the nation.
